Dear Ms. Georgiadis:

As you are likely aware, beginning in May of this year, Campaign for a Commercial-Free Childhood and The Story of Stuff Project hosted petitions urging Mattel, Inc. to put the welfare of children first and scrap its plans to sell Aristotle. More than 15,000 people have signed these petitions, asking us to send the following message to you:

We ask you not to release Aristotle, the Amazon Echo-type device for babies and young children.

Young children shouldn’t be encouraged to form bonds and friendships with data-collecting devices. Aristotle will make sensitive information about children available to countless third parties, leaving kids and families vulnerable to marketers, hackers, and other malicious actors.

Aristotle also attempts to replace the care, judgment, and companionship of loving family members with faux nurturing and conversation from a robot designed to sell products and build brand loyalty. Mattel’s own chief products officer, Robb Fujioka, has said that, "honestly speaking, we just don’t know” what impact Aristotle may have on children’s development. “If we’re successful, kids will form some emotional ties to this,” he admits, though he doesn’t know what they are: “Hopefully, it will be the right types of emotional ties.”

Young children should not be guinea pigs for AI experiments. Please put the well-being of children first and end the production of Aristotle.

The petition signatures are enclosed.

Please note that the petition signatories include 62 experts in the fields of child development, education, and privacy, whose names are listed below.

We understand that Mattel has again delayed the launch of this product—and does not presently plan to sell Aristotle in 2017. We hope this indicates that Mattel has heard and considered the concerns raised by experts and the public, and decided not to sell this product. But if there is another reason for the delay, we hope you will take this opportunity to consider the concerns raised, put the welfare of children first, and abandon plans to sell Aristotle.

We would be very glad to meet with you to discuss our concerns. We look forward to that opportunity.

Sincerely,

Josh Golin
